

Allowing cell phones on planes is a terrible idea.
As a regular business traveler I am more than willing to sacrifice the convenience of being able to talk to my business for the right to not hear someone yammering away on a phone inches away in the next cramped seat.
Perhaps planes could have phonebooth-style enclosures where people could make calls privately and without disrupting everyone else?